- 5 Please add the following new paragraph on page 2, between lines 16 and 17:

From the above and following descriptions and the drawing, it will be clear to those of ordinary skill in the art that such an outer cutting member has a multiplicity of hair inlet openings extending from an outer surface of the outer cutting member to an inner surface. The hair inlet
10 openings are arranged such that hairs to be shaved will extend through respective openings. At least one inner cutting member moves along the inner surface of the outer cutting member past these openings, and the hairs are then cut by cooperation of the inner cutting member with the outer cutting member.

From the above descriptions it is clear that the auxiliary part is preferably free from surfaces which themselves provide a function related to shaving, such as skin stretching or lubrication. Rather the auxiliary part functions only to support and position attachments such as
